HISTORY
A Teaching Service for Independence - 1970 to 1975

The Teaching Service was born on the 1st July 1970. This followed the recommendation of the Weedon Report.

Why was the Teaching Service needed?

Before the Teaching Service was formed, teachers were employed by many different agencies, missions and the Government.

The salaries and conditions of teachers varied greatly from one employer to another employer. Teachers found it difficult to transfer from one system to another and teachers who were trained by one agency worked for that agency only. Teachers trained by the government expected to receive the same pay as public servants at the time. Other teachers employed by missions only got paid a stipend by their agencies. The conditions of teachers varied considerably from agency to agency. In general government teachers were paid better than mission teachers and also lived and worked under better conditions than their mission counterparts.

What was the job of the Teaching Service 1970?

Originally the Teaching Service was to unite the teachers of the Territory of Papua New Guinea under one umbrella and make the salaries and conditions of all teachers equitable. Prior to the development of the teaching service there were about 2300 teachers employed by the Public Service Board and about 4300 were employed by the various church agencies, which had their own schools and colleges. The Teaching Service was formed on the 1st July 1970. On that date all the registered teachers, 2300 Public Service teachers transferred to the newly formed Teaching Service while the 4300 employees of the various churches (except the Seventh Day Adventist Church) were recruited into the Teaching Service.

What was the role of the Teaching Service Commission in 1970?

The Weedon Report envisaged that the Teaching Service Commission would be concerned primarily with the general rules and conditions within which the Teaching Service would operate.

The Teaching Service Commission was to have one Commissioner and an associate commissioner plus a small administrative/clerical group to service the staff appeals system and various industrial commitments.

Functions:

1) to be an employing authority for all teachers within the system but not to be concerned with clerical, administrative, inspectorial and executive level officers who will remain within the Public Service;
2) to determine the staff establishment of various types of educational institutions;
3) to record salary scales for teachers;
4) after consultation with the Territory Education Board to determine conditions for entry to the Territory Teaching Service, advancement, promotion, discipline and dismissal;
5) to arrange conduct of promotional appeals tribunals;
6) to determine conditions governing allowances, leave, holidays, furlough, retirement and resignation, etc.

Special note: Special action to be taken to preserve in full all rights, including seniority, currently enjoyed by serving Administrative personnel.

In 1970 the first role of the new Teaching Service Commission was to ensure the development of the necessary legislation which resulted in the Teaching Service Ordinance 1971. For a short period (July 1970 to December 1971) the Teaching Service Commission operated under a temporary legislation while proper legislation was being prepared. However by the time the legislation was ready it had become apparent that self-government and Independence would soon occur. The legislation therefore had to be designed for a National Teaching Service and include necessary amendments to safeguard the interests of expatriate teachers.

The Teaching Service Commission also had to see that all teachers met the standards required to be teachers in the Teaching Service. In 1970 when the 4300 church agency teachers were recruited into the teaching service they gained membership without complying with the requirements of the teaching service. Between July 1974 and June 1975 all those teachers were requested to fulfill these requirements. Since then all teachers entering the service have to meet these requirements.

Chronology of the Teaching Service

1880 The Roman Catholic, Methodist and LMS Churches established schools in German New Guinea and British New Guinea.

1890 The Lutheran and Anglican Churches established schools in their respective protectorates.

1913 The German Administration in New Guinea try to establish a National education system base on that in use in the German West African Colony of Cameroon.
Post World War I
Churches continued to be the main provider of education for Papua New Guineans. In Rabaul a multi-racial school was established for the benefit of the European, Asian and mixed race community. On Woodlark Island and Samarai Schools were provided by the government for the European Community.

Post World War II
The Government under the direction of the United Nation Trusteeship started to provide Education at the Primary Level for Papua New Guineans. The increased economic development which attracted many Europeans lead to the development of a dual education system of Australian and Territory Curriculum Schools. Multi-Racial Schools were established at Port Moresby, Rabaul and Lae. However most of the education of Papuan New Guineans still remained with the churches. By this time the SDA church and the Papuan Ekalesia and as well as numerous missions in the Highlands had also started to develop their own schools. The standard varied greatly. Administration teachers received much better pay and having better conditions than the majority of mission teachers who worked for a small stipend under very poor conditions, conditions that were barely better than village.

The Present Teaching Service Commission – 2010
TSC staff and their jobs

The Teaching Service Commission consists of 3 Commissioners, one of whom is Chairman; 3 Principal Advisors; 4 Regional Advisors; and 21 support staff - a total of 31 staff. They deal with the appeals, complaints, queries and all service and welfare conditions of the 42,000 plus teachers in the Teaching Service. This small staff is centralized in Waigani to administer the functioning of the whole Teaching Service in the 20 provinces. Because of its small size, it’s reliant on teachers, parents, agencies, educational authorities and the general public to alert it to problems and injustice in the system against teachers. It also depends for the most part on parents, agencies and education authorities to advise if teachers are cheating on their responsibility to perform their teaching duties and follow the PNGTA Code of Ethics. TSC can then take the appropriate action to deal with such problems.

Admin Assistants
When you call TSC, the voices at the end of the phones are Ms. Ikirobu Mugagata and Ms. Linda Simiri. They provide stenographic and secretarial services to the Commissioners.

The Commissioners
The 3 Commissioners are the final decision makers. They are Mr. Michael Pearson - Chairman, Mr. Jerry Kuhena - Commissioner: Policy; and Mrs. Rose August - Commissioner: Operations. Apart from dealing with the most difficult of teacher's cases, they are also involved in controlling the operations of the Teaching Service Commission. They are especially implicated in policy making, industrial and arbitration matters with the various players within the teaching service which includes the Papua New Guinea Teachers Association, National Department of Education, agencies, churches and other bodies that have an impact on the terms and conditions of teachers.

Regional Advisors
TSC has four (4) Regional Advisors in the regions namely: Mr. Anthony Tsora (NGI); Mr. Joseph Ouyoumb (Momase); Mr. Jacob Tumala (Highlands) and Mr. Leonard Kimminja (Southern). The advisors are based in their region capitals and are the face of the Teaching Service Commission in their respective regions. Their roles include advising provincial authorities on TSC matters and advising TSC on provincial matters. They may also visit schools to find out about teachers who have appeals with TSC or to find evidence to support teachers' claims.

Teaching Service Commission's dealings with other government and non government organisations

National Education Board (NEB)
The NEB has, along with other functions, advice the Teaching Service Commission on matters relating to the education system, the efficiency of school or the welfare of teachers. They oversee the appointment, promotion, transfer and discipline of members of the teaching service in national institutions in accordance with the teaching Service Act. The teaching Service Commission is not a member of the NEB but has the right to be an observer at NEB meetings. The Teaching Service Commission consults the NEB on its Policy Administration.

National Department of Education
TSC consults with the NDOE to determine conditions of employment for members of the Teaching Service and on policy formulation. TSC advises the NDOE on the standard and special allowances that might be paid to teachers. The National Education Boards in consultation with the Governing Councils of their institutions determine the appointments, discipline charges and many other related issues of their teachers. All teachers' have a right of appeal to the TSC.

Provincial Education Boards
The PEB's advise the TSC on matters relating to the provincial education service and the welfare of teacher in the province. In consultation with TSC they determine the selection, appointment, discipline, retrenchment, and resignation retirement etc of teachers in provincial institutions. Provincial Education Boards in consultation with their High School boards determine the appointments, and other related issues. Most of the governing bodies of community and primary schools are not actively involved in the appointment and disciplining of teachers. Teachers have the right of appeal to the TSC.

All Provincial Departments
They are responsible for the consultation and negotiation on the transfer of TSC functions, eg Teachers Salary Provincial divisions of education. TSC advises on the entitlements and approved allowances that are required to be paid to teachers.

Churches and NGO
TSC provides advice on teacher's rights and obligations and if necessary gives direction to these organisations in their dealings with teachers and the obligations and rights the organisation has under the act. Where necessary the TSC enforces these right and obligations.

Papua New Guinea Teachers Association (PNGTA)
TSC consults on industrial matters affecting members of the Teaching Service. PNGTA and TSC negotiate conditions of teachers from time to time when these are under review.

Department of Personnel Management (Salaries & Conditions Monitoring Committee)
TSC consults to determine the employment conditions and salaries of teachers.

Ombudsman Commission
The Ombudsman commission receives complaints from teachers and investigates the dealings of Education Authorities with teachers as a result of these complaints. The TSC acts as a sister commission to assist the Ombudsman Commission in investigation into teachers' complaints.
The Teaching Service Commission staff advises and helps teachers with their concerns and appeals. The commission is ready to advise teachers about their rights but the commission doesn’t do the job of other education authorities. Before a teacher comes to the commission, they should first approach their respective education authority or provincial education authority to have them deal with the matter at provincial level. The matter should only come to the TSC if there is a dispute about the action of the appropriate authority. Teachers should always try to solve their problem at the closest level (i.e. school, agency, district or province) before bringing it to the attention of the TSC.
